Clinically valuable biomarkers for the detection of pyelonephritis: a systematic review. Urinary tract infections (UTI) are among the most common infectious diseases in children. Treatment for pyelonephritis is long-lasting, often unnecessary, and has severe side-effects. Therefore, treatment of children with pyelonephritis must be based on highly sensitive and specific diagnostic tests. To identify and critically appraise the literature on biomarkers that can be used to detect pyelonephritis in children. A systematic literature review was performed. The searches were conducted in the electronic databases Medline and Embase. The search period ranged from 1/1/2000 to 31/12/2015. Studies were included if they were performed in children aged 0-18 years, included a control group, included a validated method of diagnosis for UTI, and if the diagnostic performance of the biomarker was described. The search yielded 54 studies. None of the 54 studies was included in the quality assessment. 10 studies were included in the critical appraisal. Biomarkers such as leukocytes, white
